Wandering Albatross

Long before Samuel Taylor Coleridge's 'Ancient Mariner' the albatross had been enmeshed in superstition for sea-faring men. Its name was inseparable from omen, weather and the spirits of sailors lost at sea. This one, the Wandering Albatross, is largest of them all and, with a wing span of over eleven feet, has the longest spread of any living bird.

It is a bird of the southern oceans with a circumglobal range centred around latitude 40° south. Albatrosses are great ship-followers, soaring with a fabulous ease and delight in their chosen sea areas of strong and more or less constant wind. Their breeding colonies are on eight or nine island groups, among them Tristan da Cunha, Kerguelen and South Georgia. At breeding sites they are gregarious and, like the rest of their avian order of 'tubenoses', lay but one egg to a clutch. It is then and only then that the Albatross looks at loss with its element. It is a bird wholly designed for sustained ocean flight; its limitations on the land are many, for the world's longest winged and most perfect soaring bird must pay no heed to compromise.

But comparatively few people witness its disadvantages on the land. To most it is a sight of which the American ornithologist Robert Cushman Murphy wrote in his 'Logbook for Grace'—'I now belong to the higher cult of mortals for I have seen the albatross.'

This is one of a series of six menu cards depicting some of the beautiful birds that may be seen in and around the countries and oceans served by P & O ships. The original oil paintings were specially executed and described for P & O by Keith Shackleton, R.S.M.A., S.W.L.A., and printed in England by Daniel Greenaway & Sons Ltd.
