

Building A Better Ewa

The photo above shows a portion of the 50 acre plot in the makai coral flats now being prepared for diversified crops. This area originally was earmarked as a dumping ground for mill wastes. But with the change in plans for mill waste disposal, so did the company's plans for the area's reclamation.

When the hay plant begins operating, mill wastes will be used to make cattle feed - then no more opala for land reclamation. Hydroseparator mud will eventually be pumped into this area to build up the land for sugar cane. But rather than leaving the land idle for the year or so that it will take before the mud pumping is begun, the company decided to use it productively in the meantime for diversified crops.

Seen above is a bulldozer constructing an irrigation ditch to supply this area with water.

House 32, "C" Village, Goes Up In Flames

The full impact of the tragedy of a house fire was felt at Ewa last week when House #32, "C" Village, home of Mr. and Mrs. Pedro Paragoso, was completely and totally razed shortly after noon on Friday.

The cause was the deadly combination of "small-boy-plus-lighter", made much worse by failure to report the burning bedroom to adults.

Except for a mere handful of belongings, everything was destroyed - furnishings, appliances, clothing, cherished mementos, money - virtually all their earthly possessions. Yet, as

Mr. Paragoso voiced philosophically - his family, and the plantation too, had suffered loss, but luckily no one was injured.

Yes, the fire fighters were there, but the plantation's units assisted by the Ewa Beach Fire Station crews were hard put as it was to keep the flames from spreading to neighboring houses.

The Paragoso's loss is then a tragic reminder to the community that fire hazards are ever-present, and fire prevention is everyone's responsibility all the time.

1890 ECHOES FROM EWA'S PAST 1965

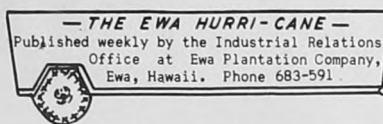

Steeped in human warmth, with a general feeling of prosperity, well-being and good will pervading throughout the community -- that was Ewa in 1928. The census of plantation employees and their families on December 31st that year showed a community of 4,967 men, women and children.

Serving the people's needs were the Plantation Store with its branches in the three larger villages, a butcher shop, soda water and ice manufacturing plant, ranch and dairy. There was also a collection office of the Bank of Hawaii which in the two years of existence then, had opened about 900 accounts.

The Free Kindergarten operated by the plantation since 1897 had an enrollment of 182 children. The Health Center established in cooperation with the Board of Health carried on an aggressive program of proper infant care, and the 1928 report stated, "This work is constantly lowering our already low infant mortality rate, and we have a more healthy group of children growing up." Also mentioned is that, "...36,866 quarts of milk were produced and sold at low cost to employees with the exception of 5,100 quarts given to children upon recommendation of our nurse."

And that good year was made even better for Ewa, for the plantation enjoyed a record "banner" year in which production soared to 54,196 tons of sugar.

Bob starred in basketball for Ewa in the OPAA league from 1937-'40. He was named "All Star" forward and "High Point Man" when Ewa captured the championship in 1939.
