Six Years of Experience with AtD Implementation

Since 2007, Kapiolani Community College has been a part of the Achieving the Dream \(AtD\) national initiative dedicated to helping community college students succeed, particularly Native Hawaiian and other underserved populations. AtD colleges work to close the achievement gap and accelerate student success by: 1) transforming practices through evidence based decision making, and 2) implementing policy change in the quest for better student outcomes.

A leading indigenous-serving institution, the College has implemented strategic outcome efforts in the past six years to greatly increase educational opportunities available to Native Hawaiian students by aligning AtD goals with the Strategic Plan and department tactical plans. As such, these efforts to meet AtD standards can be sustained because they are embedded into the College's planning framework.

Financial Support from OHA and Kamehameha Schools

The Office of Hawaiian Affairs made a five-year, half-million dollar commitment, culminating next year, to the Achieving the Dream initiative being implemented in the University of Hawaii Community College system. In addition, the Kamehameha Schools donated an average of $78,000 annually for five years to the initiative, according to program officials.
