Aloha, everyone.

We are about to introduce several improvements to the Kapi'olani Community College website that may impact those who work directly with our students. We want to give you ample notice in the event that some of your materials may need to be updated to reflect these changes.

As you may know, accessibility has become a justifiably important issue when it comes to communicating with a diverse audience. The entire UH System has made accessibility a high priority across all campuses. We're trying our best to stay ahead of the curve and we've been deeply involved in the conversation at every step of the way. Stay tuned. This issue deeply impacts all of us and we may ask your help to tackle this ongoing challenge in an effort to improve our online accessibility.

As we've consistently practiced Section 508 compliance practices on our site(s), new tools and improved training have identified numerous areas in need of improvement. Over time you'll begin to notice these improvements reflected on our site, such as updated documents, table design, color adjustments, etc. We'll be sure to notify you should any of these changes reflect major alterations.

While working on these improvements, we've taken the opportunity to review some of our early design concepts. One of the features we've targeted is the Program Toolboxes. This concept was introduced as a way to conveniently group assorted documents and organize materials on individual program pages. Over the years program stakeholders have culled many of their legacy documents, streamlining the organization process. So, listing documents on the program pages makes better sense, allowing us to reduce the number of mouse clicks and put the documents in a more logical, easy-to-find location.

From the feedback we've received, this will make it easier for students to navigate the program features and find the materials they need. Of course there will likely be certain departments that, due to volume considerations, would benefit from individual Toolbox pages, e.g., Financial Aid and Admissions. These departments offer many documents essential to the general student body. We're exploring ways to make these high volume pages more visible and functional.

Thanks for your continued patience.
